

GOODNIGHT

by Kate Parker

Sleep softly, don't make a sound,
Close your eyes don't let the tears run down,
I'll grasp you tightly 'til your sobs have gone,
Just listen to my breaths and watch the darkness fall

Darling I don't wish to wake up,
I dream to hold your heart,
Maybe if I don't let go and you don't give up
We won't be torn apart when you're gone,
'Cause I'd miss you then and I'd be living in,

Yesterday when you'd be kissing my lips,
And hugging my heart, instead of tomorrow
Where your soul's drifted away,
And your body is but a memory.

I hope you believe me when I say,

Don't cry my love, don't cry
Your soul may fade into the dark of the night,
But we'll still be dreaming,
Always.

So watch me dream,
Watch me sleep,
We'll fight the best we can,
All we can do, What you told me to

Don't cry my love, don't cry
Your soul may fade into the dark of the night,
But we'll still be dreaming,
Always.

All the things one has forgotten scream for help in dreams ~ Elias Canetti

Untitled by Ellie Roth

At The End
by Katherine Hansen

Climbing to the top,
You drive with all you've got.
But in the end, is the top what you want?

Searching through every door,
To find just what you wish for.
Yet is it the end you seek, or do you seek to seek?

A fight can win a battle.
A debate can pick a side.
And all you'll see it turn out to be,
Is a result that comes and dies.

'Cause the top isn't always best,
It has too many guests.
The journey up along is the true chorus of your song.

And searching for a treasure,
Becomes far difficult beyond measure.
When you find the quest is where you are at rest.

The fight will win the battle.
The debate will pick the side.
But without a proper heart,
You'll be left pondering, why?

